Writing colorful letters

Calligraphy

By Jeanne Irwin

Jeanne Irwin carefully grips her pen, positions her piece of paper and begins writing.

And her letters have a more colorful look than most others. She adds flair and art to her work.

"Calligraphy is more than just the art of beautiful writing," said the Upland resident.

"You don't have to be an artist. I believe words are very nice when trying to convey a message or write a letter, but saying those words with a little flair and some pictures is better."

The ancient Persians and Chinese regarded calligraphy as an art equal to, if not more important than, painting.

Irwin is a self-described "crafts person," who eagerly looks forward to different types of art projects.

But since she started her calligraphy eight years ago, it has become an integral part of most of her work.

Her work even shows through in her job with the U.S. Forest Service. Although she works with developing and supplying equipment to the service, she is called upon regularly to do much of the department's artwork.

Each year at the Los Angeles County Fair, Irwin displays her work. Last year she drew the large Smokey the Bear posters for the forest service.

Irwin is a conservationist and uses her calligraphy talents to help wildlife.

She draws and designs crafts and stationery for the Friends of the Sea Otter in Carmel.

Irwin also teaches calligraphy classes for the Upland Recreation Department.

"If a person holds his pen at a 45-degree angle and concentrates on each letter, he should be able to do well. The flair so many people like about calligraphy will come later," she said with a smile.

"I have very few students who, at the end of the six-week class, don't have a good hand."

In order to improve, though, it takes practice.

"But doesn't everything in life?" she asked.

Once a student learns the basic structures of certain letters such as "a"

and "g," the rest of the alphabet is easier, she said.

Even Irwin continually practices, despite the fact that her work is skillfully done. Onlookers can be easily confused about whether a piece of writing was her product or that of a machine.

Several different types of calligraphy alphabets can be mastered, but each has various difficulty levels in achieving success.

"I think if you can do one well, you're doing fine," she said. "I have to do things a couple of times. You can't do it right at first."

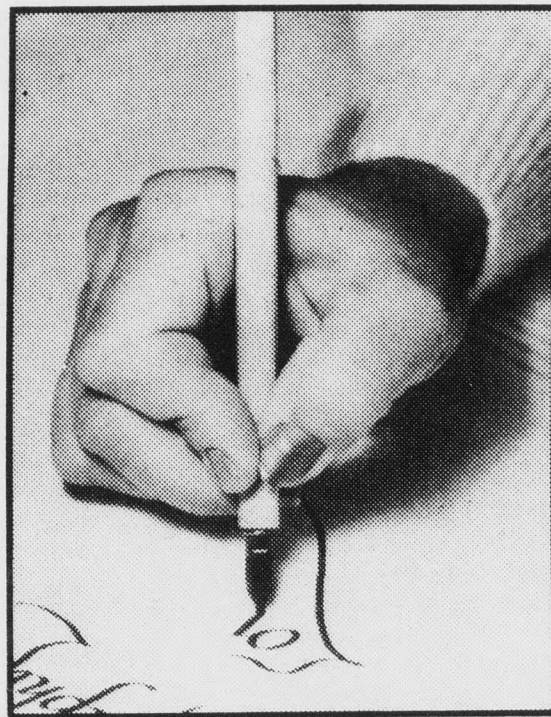

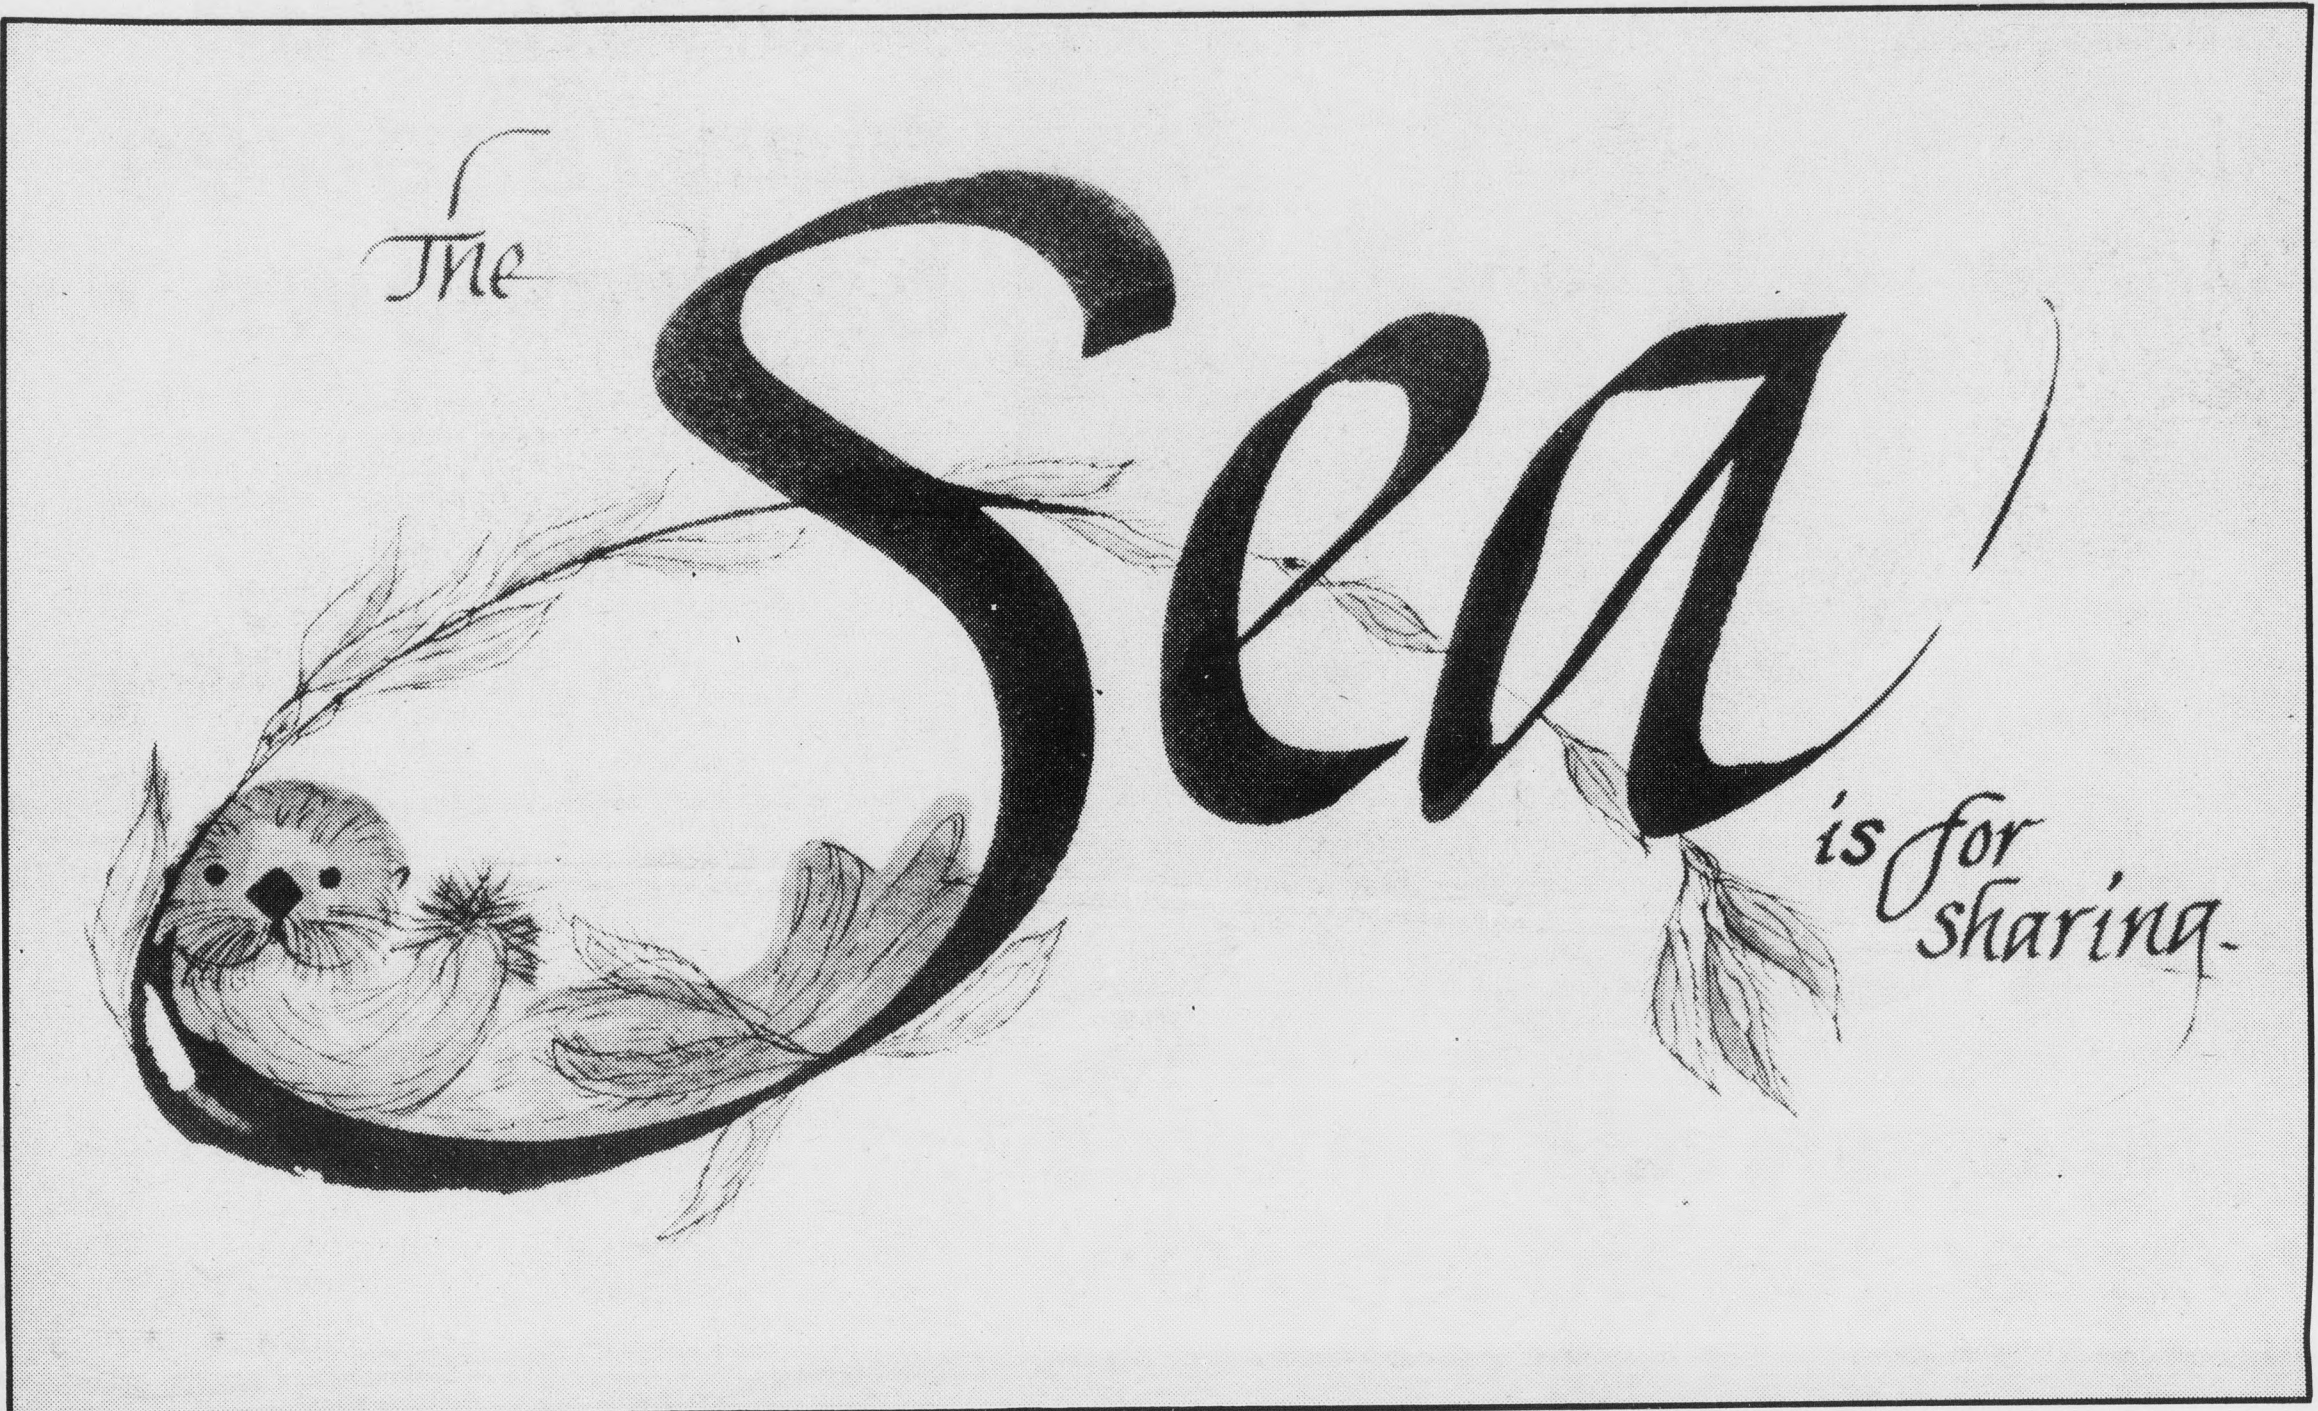

Instead of simply repeating the alphabet one letter at a time in calligraphy, Irwin usually has her students write sentences, phrases or sayings.

"That makes it more interesting and fun."

Although calligraphy has captured man's attention for centuries, the art is experiencing a renewed interest today, she said.

"It's very popular, I think, because people see the types of greeting cards there are out now that cost $1.50 and they're realizing they want to do it themselves." □

Burn victim Wendy Guadagni feels that despite her misfortune, she was lucky to survive.

Plane crash victim makes progress toward recovery

By Kimberly Heinrichs

Wendy Guadagni knew it wasn't time to die when she saw the face of her dead grandmother, gently telling her, "not now."

In those hazy moments immediately after the explosion she saw her grandmother and others in her family as if in a dream.

Back now in her Upland home, Wendy retains vivid memories of her visit to a Concord shopping mall two days before last Christmas, when an airplane crashed through its roof.

She was pulled out of the fire by a passing shopper. She had already gotten herself out, although she does not remember it, and was apparently wandering back into the flames to find her cousin.

When she first saw the fireball descending from the ceiling she thought it was a holiday light show.

Seconds later she, her cousin, and 77 others were burned in the fire. Her cousin and six others, including the plane's pilot and two passengers, later died from their injuries.

After she was pulled out of the fire, a young paramedic who had been shopping at the center, appeared at her side. He began pulling and cutting off her smoldering clothes much to Wendy's distress, she recalled.

Not realizing the extent of her injuries, she protested the destruction of each item of clothing. She had on her favorite shoes, a brand-new coat and a sweatshirt that was a gift from her boyfriend.

"There I was, completely naked in the middle of the mall," she remembered, laughing. She doesn't recall being self-conscious about the experience. The whole scene had an air of unreality, she said.

She did know that her face was burned. She remembers seeing a woman scream after seeing her face. The first thing she asked the paramedic was how bad her face was. He told her, bluntly, that she was badly burned, but assured her that it would be fixed by surgery.

She adopted his positive attitude from the start.

"I never thought I wasn't going to make it," she said, although she was later told that she had had only a 50 percent chance of living.

The 20-year old spent the next 2½ months on her back in a Berkeley hospital.

She came back to Upland about a month ago to finish her recovery at her parents' home. A graduate of Upland High

Vehicle trail plan receives bad reviews

By Andrew Horan

Sportsmen and environmentalists are banding together to battle management plans — including a proposed 75-mile off-highway vehicle trail — for the San Bernardino National Forest.

The trail, which is just one of many recommendations in the U.S. Forest Service's forest management plan, would begin at Baldy Mesa, just northeast of Wrightwood, and wander eastward to the desert.

The San Bernardino National Forest Coalition is fighting the cross-forest trail because it fears users will leave the path, ride into wilderness areas and destroy them.

"The guy who rides his motorcycle illegally through an area does more damage to wildlife than a single bullet," Jim Matthews, conservation chairman of the Southern California Deerhunters, said in a telephone interview.

Forestry officials have proposed constructing the cross-forest trail, and a series of smaller, connecting loop trails, as a way to bring off-highway vehicle (OHV) users under control.

OHVs include machines such as four-wheel drive trucks, "dirt bike" motorcycles and all-terrain vehicles that are not licensed by the Department of Motor Vehicles.

There are currently 83 miles of trails designed specifically for OHV use in the 819,000-acre forest, according to Bill Makel, USFS recreational specialist.

He estimated another 900 miles of unpaved forestry roads are available to OHV users.

But "there is a certain amount of illegal OHV activity," Makel said, "among users who leave the designated trails and unpaved roads to travel across the forest."

So environmentalists and sportsmen, upset over that illegal use, formed the coalition. Members plan to present the forest service with a conservationist alternative to the management plan May 1.

"Habitual use of the forest by off-highway vehicles destroys that habitat for any other use," Matthews said.

"They are the only users that have that open license," he continued. "Hunters and fishers have limits. But (OHV users) will destroy an area, and then it's not available for any other uses because the animals desert it."

Makel agreed that illegal use takes its toll.

"We see soil erosion, water quality problems, areas where sensitive and endangered species are adversely impacted," he said.

The cross-forest trail would reduce that damage, he said.

The 900 miles of unpaved forestry roads would be off-limits and OHV users would be permitted to use only designated trails, according to Makel.

"We feel by concentrating OHV use, it will be easier to administer the program," he said. "Then, if they are in places that it is illegal to have OHVs, we can go up to them and cite them."

But USFS has that enforcement capability now.

"We think the biggest problem is enforcement," said Joyce Burk, coalition chairwoman. "The Forest Service can't enforce what they've got now," agreed Larry LaPre of the San Bernardino Audubon Society.

Makel said enforcement would begin with an education program.

"It will involve a variety of ways of reaching people," he said.

More tennis courts due

Two of three R.C. projects get grants

By Marianne Aiken

By the end of the year there will be more places to play tennis in Rancho Cucamonga.

The city has received preliminary approval of two grants that will pay for six lighted tennis courts, two of them at Lions Park on Base Line Road, and four of them at Beryl Park on Beryl Street.

Currently, the only public place residents can play tennis is on the courts at Alta Loma High School, and then only when the courts are not in use by the school.

The $217,000, total, Roberti-

Z'berg grants also will pay for picnic areas at the two locations, said Rancho Cucamonga Community Services Director Bill Holley.

"This was on a competitive basis," Holley said of the grants. "We submitted three projects and received indication that two of the three would be funded. This was in competition with all the major cities in California."

Holley said the money will be available July 1 and the courts and picnic areas should be constructed by the end of the year.

Assistant park planner Jim

Benedetti said National Recreation and Park Association standards indicate there should be one court per 2,000 residents in a city the size of Rancho Cucamonga. The city needs eight to ten more tennis courts to serve the approximate 30,000 residents in the Alta Loma area of the city, and the six new courts will help fill that gap.

According to one survey, one out of every 14 Californians, or 7 percent, would like to play tennis more often.

It is anticipated that the courts will be used 14 hours per day, together serving more than 3,000 people.

County begins processing bonds

SAN BERNARDINO — County officials last week began processing an application that would provide $6.1 million in bond financing for a manufacturing company to locate in Upland.

If approved, the bond financing would result in construction of a plastics molding plant employing 67 people in the West Valley.

The county Board of Supervisors on April 14 gave its authorization for the county Economic Development Department to begin processing the bond application on behalf of KTK Holding, Inc.

The Newhall firm is proposing to move its processing plant from the City of Commerce to a four-acre site at 1431 W. Ninth St. near the intersection with Mountain Avenue in Upland, according to Joe White, the county's director for economic development.

The money would be used to construct three buildings,

"We'll contact organized groups, and we'll have a concentrated effort on the ground with signing and personal contact to inform people of the new policy and where they can go to get what they're looking for.

"It's been our experience," Makel continued, "people using the newly constructed trails tend to stay on them because they provide the kind of experience they're looking for."

But LaPre disagreed.

"In every case that we've seen," he said, "they leave the trails and ride through the forest."

The coalition also argues that more land in the Cucamonga management area of the forest should be given "wilderness" status. That would require the areas remain roadless, according to USFS officials.

Makel said the Forest Service decided not to label the lands wilderness so that it could better manage the area and leave it open to a wider variety of uses.

However, the coalition applauded USFS's decision to deny expansion of the Mt. Baldy Ski resort into Stockton Flats, near Lytle Creek.

College student new Miss R.C.

A 22-year-old Chaffey College student is the new Miss Rancho Cucamonga.

Joan Van Dran was selected from a field of 14 contestants Saturday night in the annual competition sponsored by the Rancho Cucamonga Chamber of Commerce and the William Lyon Co.

Van Dran received a trophy and a $500 scholarship, which was donated by the William Lyon Co., as prizes in the competition held at the Alta Loma High School auditorium.

Van Dran, a resident of the city for 6½ years, was born in Orange and has a career as a graphic design/magazine layout designer mapped out.

She works at McCormack Dental X-Ray Lab and was sponsored in the contest by Ontario Community Hospital.

Presently a Chaffey College student, Van Dran also is a member of the Humane Society of the United States.

Van Dran said she enjoys visiting art museums and animation festivals in her spare time.

Her other hobbies are aerobics, tennis, hiking, drawing, dancing, sculpture, 1960s and classical music, foreign languages and sea life.

"I am particularly fond of dolphins," she said.

Planned R.C. hospital remains in works, declares administrator

By Marianne Aiken

Rumors of the death of a planned 133-bed hospital in Rancho Cucamonga are greatly exaggerated, said a hospital administrator.

"It's alive," said John Packard, project administrator of the future Chaffey Memorial Hospital.

Plans are still on to construct the $29 million hospital on Milliken Avenue near Foothill Boulevard, even though construction has not started this spring, as was anticipated.

Packard, who is also chief executive officer of Ontario Community Hospital, said local physicians have shown interest in investing in what will be Rancho Cucamonga's first full-service hospital.

"Recently we are to the point of saying we've got our design concepts down, let's determine the financial package," Packard said. "When you start doing that and you look at alternatives, that could have created rumors, plus the fact that we thought we would start construction in the spring and now we're not doing it."

Construction has always been planned to start in September, Packard said, but "we felt we could start even sooner because we're ahead of schedule."

"We've been doing architectural planning and doing all the space needs, as well as tying in all the buildings on the site," he said.

The hospital will be built by a major health care chain, National Medical Enterprises (NME), and will allow NME to consolidate its acute-care hospital functions into the Rancho Cucamonga facility.

Possible overcrowding at UHS root of controversy

By Kimberly Heinrichs

Possible overcrowding at Upland High School continues to be at the center of controversy with the preparation of a new fact sheet on school unification.

In his three-page report, Upland school district Superintendent George Renworth states there will be no overcrowding at the high school.

However, three sets of numbers have emerged from the fray. The Upland district, the Chaffey Joint Union High School District and the independent county-funded feasibility study by Stallings & Associates all point to different student body totals.

If unification is approved at a state hearing in June, it could go before the voters next fall.

If passed, Upland High School would join the present elementary district at the beginning of the 1987-88 school year. Some 600 students enrolled in other Chaffey schools could return to Upland High School or other district schools.

Renworth, whose numbers are the lowest of the three, said he based his projections on current enrollments in the Upland seventh and eighth grades and current ninth and 10th graders at Upland High School. He said he used the high school's average dropout rate formula.

He also assumed that the Chaffey district would allow 11th and 12th grade students at the time to complete their high school education at Chaffey, Montclair and Valley View Continuation high schools if they preferred.

Chaffey Superintendent Mike Dirksen disagreed with Renworth's total enrollment of 2,591 for the 1987-88 school year, and warned that the district may not be able to keep all the 11th graders at its other schools because of its own overcrowding problems.

Using figures from an October state-required enrollment report, Dirksen estimated that even without the 11th and 12th graders attending the other Chaffey schools, the student total at Upland High School still would be 2,709 — 118 more than Renworth's projections.

The Stallings report indicated still more students, but Renworth said those figures are bloated by inclusion of the two upper grades attending the other

Fate of historic house hangs in balance

By Marianne Aiken

An historic house in Alta Loma will not become a city landmark yet because Rancho Cucamonga officials think it might interfere with traffic.

The problem is that the Ledig Homestead, an 87-year-old, two-story, Victorian-style house on Amethyst Street, is located directly in the path of the planned extension of Wilson Avenue.

Wilson currently ends on the east side of Amethyst, but if a western extension of Wilson is built, the property would have to be purchased by the city, and the house would either have to be moved or destroyed.

"How the historical aspects are dealt with is a community decision," said City Engineer Lloyd Hubbs.

Council members said, when they voted to table the Historic Preservation Commission's request that the house be a designated landmark last Wednesday, that they were not commenting on the house's historical value.

"I'd be a little hesitant about making the designation until you know if you're going to take the land with the structure," said Councilwoman Pam Wright.

Owner Michael Choate, who initiated the city landmark designation, said he was afraid the issue would end up stalled in a committee.

"They said it themselves, 'We don't question the landmark,'" Choate said after the meeting. "They said to me, 'Yes it's a landmark, but we'll decide if it's a landmark after we decide whether we want to move it or not.'"

Choate said it would be cheaper for the city to designate the house a historical landmark and then pay to have it moved when the extension of Wilson is built, rather than buy it from him at the fair market value when the road comes through.

The 87-year-old Ledig Homestead at 5702 Amethyst St., Alta Loma, one of five houses built by the sons of a prominent citrus-growing family, was turned down for designation as a city landmark because it sits in the path of Wilson Avenue.

"I'm sure it would be cheaper to move it," Choate said.

He also said that there are other ways to route Wilson through the neighborhood.

"There are clearly other ways for Wilson to go around there," he said. "There are several major communities with houses in the way of that path. I'd hate to see my project get hung up when on the other end, there would be many homes in the way of the extension."

Councilman Jon Mikels said the council should consider the item again after a traffic circulation study is completed as part of the city's upcoming five-year general plan review.

The house is one of five built by the Ledig brothers, sons of L.

M. Ledig, who moved here at the turn of the century when Alta Loma was known as lamcsa, said Helen Kilmurray, a former member of the Historic Preservation Commission.

"They really were quite a prominent family in the citrus industry," she said.

The Ledigs first settled in a 20-acre citrus grove on the northwest corner of Banyan Street and Hellman Avenue.

Each of the five Ledig brothers built their homes on or near Hellman, Kilmurray said.

The house will be featured in an issue of the magazine, "Better Homes and Gardens" next year, Choate said.

R.C. takes step to join insurance pool

By Marianne Aiken

After going more than two months without insurance, Rancho Cucamonga officials have taken the first steps toward getting the city insured again.

City administrative services director Jim Hart said after studying the insurance dilemma, a committee has given initial approval to joining the California Municipal Insurance Authority (CMIA), a statewide pool providing cities with general liability coverage.

The committee, consisting of Mayor Jeff King, Councilman Chuck Buquet, City Manager Lauren Wasserman and City Attorney James Markman approved the CMIA plan, formed by Marsh & McLennan, an insurance brokerage firm.

Hart described the plan as a pool set up for cities which are currently under fire by insurance companies that refuse to provide liability coverage.

The city must decide if it wants to join the CMIA by May 1, Hart said.

"As of right now we're going to proceed with the pool," Hart said Monday. "The paperwork that's necessary is being finalized."

Hart said the City Council should have all the paperwork necessary to ratify the plan by its May 7 meeting.

"The actual coverage will provide the same basic coverage as the insurance companies would provide," Hart explained. "The only difference is you're pooling your risks with other agencies rather than standing on your own."

Hart said that since the city's old insurance company refused to re-insure the city Jan. 30, about eight lawsuits have been filed against Rancho Cucamonga, most of them related to street construction.

"We generally forward the claims to them (the construction company)," Hart said. "The number isn't what's important. It's the analysis of whether or not it's a legitimate situation.

"For example, I could trip and fall on a sidewalk and sue the city for $50 million but the claim itself might be worth only $500 or $600 dollars. The actual amount isn't as important as the validity of the claim," Hart said.

If the council ratifies the CMIA pool membership, the city's insurance coverage will become effective July 1, Hart said.

R.C. picks agency to conquer fly problems

By Marianne Aiken

Getting more flies per swat is the goal of the agency selected last Wednesday to end three years of buzzing over Rancho Cucamonga's fly control problems.

Services will begin immediately after the West Valley Vector Control District negotiates a contract with the city, probably around the first part of May, said administrative analyst Mark Lorimer.

The West Valley agency won out over the county's Environmental Health Services department, even though the county entered a lower bid for similar service.

"Both agencies are capable of giving the city more cluck for it's buck, as we say in the poultry business," said consultant Gene Zdunowski, who was hired by the city in September to seek out a pest control program.

Council members, with Mayor Jeff King absent, skirted a tie vote Wednesday in agreeing to negotiate a contract with West Valley, although Councilmen Dick Dahl and Chuck Buquet indicated that they would have liked to award the contract to the county.

Councilman Jon Mikels said he didn't see the sense in negotiating a contract with the county when the county is already supposed to be controlling the fly problem on a complaint basis.

"We are discussing that here tonight because of our unhappiness with the service that they're supposed to be providing," Mikels said.

Resident Kathy Wheatley, who has come before the council repeatedly on this issue, asked the council to give the nod to the West Valley group.

"We've had the control by the county in the past and we're still sitting in the same place, three years down the road," she said.

The district will respond to citizen complaints, inspect fly breeding grounds, and apply pesticides on an emergency basis during fly outbreaks, with a full-time environmental specialist on duty in city offices.

A package of pest control enforcement ordinances will come before the council later to give some bite to the new program.

Lorimer said the council will probably vote on the new contract at its May 7 meeting.

School districts may join insurance pool

By Kimberly Heinrichs

Several area school districts may join a statewide pool that would save them thousands of dollars in liability insurance premiums.

Districts already in the Public Schools Insurance Authority, a county insurance pool, may join other counties in a statewide effort to cut the costs of insurance to school districts and put the money back in education, according to John Malone, county interim risk manager.

The statewide program would cut district expenses from $12-$14 a student each year to only $3 a student for liability premiums, district officials said.

Malone said PSIA would probably make its decision whether to join by June.

The new program, founded by

Kern County districts and joined by Santa Barbara and San Luis Obispo counties, would require all members to donate money to cover a loss from $1 million to $10 million of one district, Malone said.

Insurance companies would be bypassed entirely, he said.

So far, the boards of the Upland, Fontana Unified, Central, Alta Loma and Chaffey Community College school districts have agreed to enter the state pool.

These districts belong to PSIA, which will still take care of claims below $1 million. But Malone said the state pool will not be limited to those in the county program.

Malone said that he could only find four companies worldwide that would provide $1 million worth of liability insurance for school districts and cities.

Although local districts got most of their insurance needs covered this year they all found their premiums jumped tremendously, while their coverage dropped.

Central School District saw a dramatic increase in premiums from $17,450 in insurance coverage last school year to $127,344 this year, according to

WalkAmerica eyes more pledges and event participants

By Suzanne Sproul

WalkAmerica needs more pledges and participants for Sunday's fund-raiser.

The fund-raiser will be sponsored by the March of Dimes Defects Foundation in the West Valley.

The walk, which winds through Ontario, Upland, Rancho Cucamonga and Montclair, will begin at the Chaffey High School cafeteria on Euclid Avenue in Ontario. Registration begins at 7 a.m., with ribbon cutting ceremonies at 8.

"What we need now are walkers and pledges," said Carol Olson, Inland Counties Chapter March of Dimes public information coordinator.

Birth defects are the nation's leading child health problem, she said.

The March of Dimes provides programs of research, medical/community service and public and professional education.

"This project helps raise money that will be used toward furthering the positive outcome of pregnancy," Olson said.

About 200 businesses are expected to field teams for the half-day event.

The theme of the walk-a-thon in the West Valley this year will be "Walk Through Great American Moments," said Bob Bowman, West Valley walk-a-thon coordinator.

"Each check point will have a theme such as the Pilgrims arriving in America, the Civil War and the 1849 California Gold Rush," he said.

A West Valley band, Backstreet, is scheduled to perform for the walkers and foundation supporters at the high school.

The band will begin performing at 1:30 p.m., according to Roman "Roach" Foronda.

"All the members of the band have other jobs. This is a good cause. We want to do our part and it sure beats walking," Foronda said.

Foronda and fellow band members Al Canestro Jr., Mark Herring, Mike O'Connor, Gary Douglas and Ray Miranda have volunteered their services.

Thirteen other March of Dimes groups in the state also will be sponsoring walk-a-thons that weekend.

In conjunction with the event, local Jazzercise groups will stage a Jazzercise-a-thon April 26 benefiting the foundation.

Walk-a-thon sponsor sheets are available at the following businesses in the West Valley: K mart, 7-Eleven, Chief Auto Parts and Miller's Outpost.

Plant remains nameless

WFA postpones its decision until June

It's a plant with no name. Last week, for the second time in three months, the Water Facilities Authority failed to name a water treatment plant planned for Upland.

The WFA, a joint powers agency that includes water districts serving Chino, Montclair, Ontario, Rancho Cucamonga, Upland and unincorporated areas of the county, will supervise construction of the plant.

WFA board members were scheduled to choose from among five suggested names for the facility, but delayed the decision until June.

Among the names in contention were "George Chaffey," "Agua de Lejos,"

"Agua Dulce," "Agua Fresco para las Cinco" and "John V. Benson."

The board did approve hiring three employees for the yet-to-be-constructed facility.

A chief treatment plant operator, maintenance technician and receptionist will be hired from a pool of applicants.

Michael Valenti's parents' driveway is about the only piece of pavement his 1955 Thunderbird ever sees (top left). Everything in the 31-year-old car works, even the radio (above). It's details like these hubcaps (right) that win the car awards time after time. Valenti frequently competes with car owners who are more than twice his age (opposite page), and says he has detected a little jealousy from people who wish they had a car like his when they were 16.

Story by Marianne Aiken

Photos by Alexander Gallardo

A 16-year-old's classic

Most people don't worry about how dirty the bottoms of their cars are. Sixteen-year-old Michael Valenti is an exception.

With his 1955 two-seater Thunderbird snugly parked safely under its cover and parked inside his parents' garage, Valenti keeps looking forward to the next classic car show, and an opportunity to add to his collection of first-place trophies.

Valenti, who is a sophomore at Alta Loma High School, got the restored bright red car with its 30 coats of lacquer last year, as a gift from his father.

The car is never driven, except up and down the driveway to show off to visitors.

That's to keep all those award-winning details up to snuff, Valenti said.

And details are what win shows. "They mark off for everything," Valenti said. "They look underneath, and all that."

Everything works in the car, even the radio.

"The car's never been rained on, and it has no dents," Valenti said. "It's perfectly straight."

"We just went to four shows and got four first-places and then last Sunday we blew our streak," Valenti said, pointing to the third-place trophy in his driveway next to a variety of first-place awards.

"There were 1,600 cars, and only 128 got trophies," Valenti said of the unlucky Knott's Berry Farm show April 13 that broke his winning streak.

"The guy who got first had the first T-bird ever made, right off the assembly line. It wasn't really better than mine, it was just the first one."

Valenti's father bought the classic car from a private collector who restored it.

Valenti said he didn't know how much his father paid for the car, or how much it was worth, but said he saw a similar car at a show once, and the owner wanted $70,000 for it.

He started entering car shows about six months ago.

"The cars that were winning weren't even half as good as ours, so I started entering," he said, mostly competing against other two-seater Thunderbirds and Corvettes, in the classic division.

The car has logged only 4,000 miles on the road, most of it racked up by the previous owner.

"I really don't even clean it unless there's a show," Valenti said.

Body, paint, and overall appearance, are the qualities the car is judged on, he said.

Valenti said the reason his car wins so many contests is because it has hard-to-find features, like original stickers and parts.

The 31-year-old car even smells new.

"The only reason I think it wins is the originality. The other cars aren't or if they are, they aren't as clean."

What's the most frequently-asked question about the car?

"A lot of people ask me if it's Dan Tanna's car from the TV show, 'Vegas,'" Valenti said. It's not the fictional television detective's car, but Valenti said he'd like to get the car into the movies.

"But then I'd have to go to every audition," he said, "and I wouldn't like that." □

The controversy over a plan to regulate ambulance services countywide appears to have simmered down, according to the plan's author and city officials.

Concern has eased after the buy out of one local ambulance company by its only competitor and the adjustment of service-area boundaries in Rancho Cucamonga, official say.

The San Bernardino County Emergency Medical Care Committee (EMCC) heard a report April 17 indicating that after a stormy public hearing on the plan in February, the only amendment now necessary is an adjustment of the service area boundary-line so that the city of Rancho Cucamonga is in one service area instead of two.

That report, from Dr. George Pettersen, the director of the county's department of public health, indicates that he is awaiting final state approval of the plan before beginning the competitive bidding process outlined in the plan.

Pettersen said last week that he is about a week away from completing and mailing out the requests for proposals. After that, it should take two to three months to complete the competitive bidding and select an ambulance company to serve the cities of Rancho Cucamonga and Upland.

Because Trans-Medical Inc. in March purchased its competitor, Canyon Medical Services Inc., and the county's qualifications to bid require three years of continual service in the area, it appears Trans-Medical will become the only ambulance company providing emergency ambulance services in the two cities.

Rancho Cucamonga officials had expressed concern that the countywide plan drafted late last year would exclude some capable ambulance companies, such as Canyon, which had less than three years experience in the West Valley.

With the buy-out of Canyon and the adjustment of the boundary lines, Rancho Cucamonga City Manager Lauren Wasserman, a member of the EMCC, said the city's concerns have mostly been addressed or made moot.

"As far as we're concerned, it (the plan) makes some sense now," Wasserman said.

Pettersen agreed that most of the objections to the plan have been muted.

"New things can always happen, but I think people have settled down a bit because they've become accustomed to the idea that a plan is needed," Pettersen said.

Libraries' video rentals irksome to store owners

By Suzanne Sproul

West Valley libraries are expanding their video cassette rental program, to the delight of patrons. But the move is seen as an abuse of tax money by many video store owners.

Although patrons may be thrilled with the service, some video store owners aren't.

"We have a pretty big clientele so I don't think having libraries rent videos is a big threat," said Darlene Cherbak, an employee at Movieland Video in Rancho Cucamonga.

But Pat Crowell, owner of the Video Depot in Upland, is more concerned.

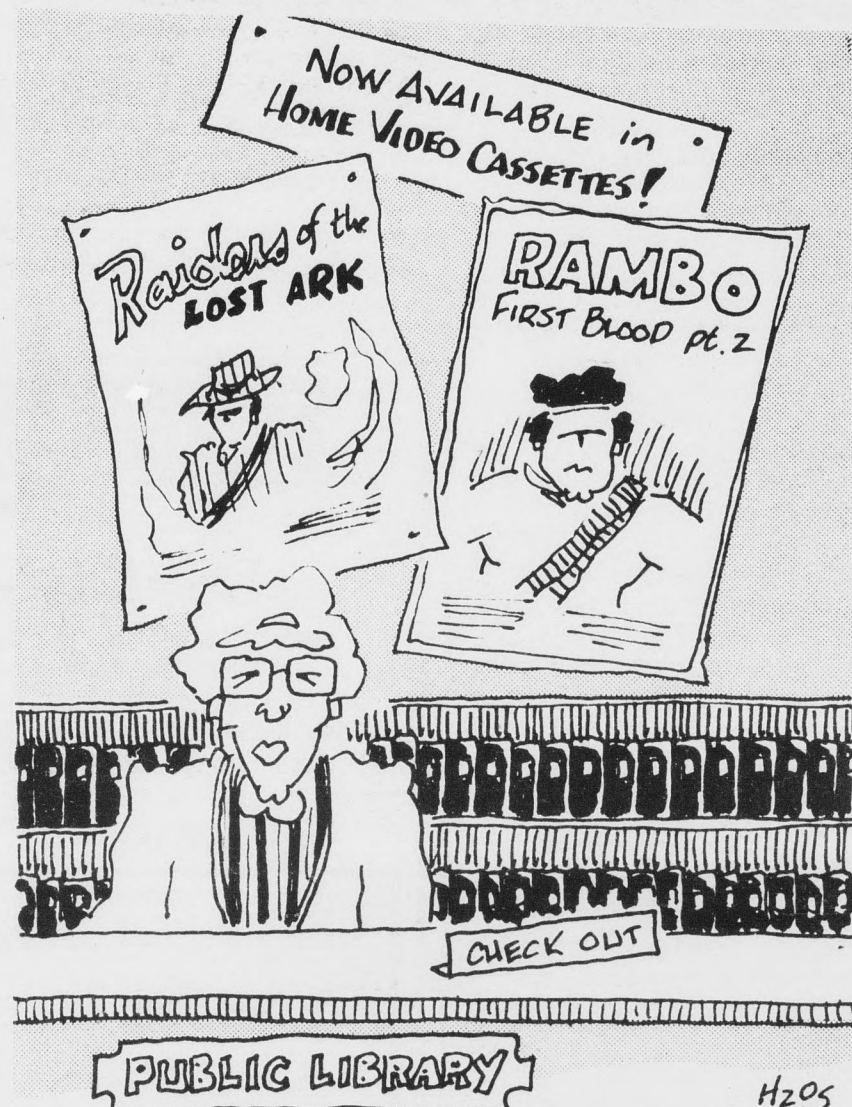

"I'm not happy about having my tax dollars go to support the library who now is in direct competition with me. No, I'm not happy," Crowell said.

Local libraries have not delved into the business as much as others in California, but Crowell said she still is concerned about the future.

"Some people argue that it's just like the library competing with bookstores, but books are literature and videos aren't," she said.

But local library spokesmen said the cassettes usually are paid for using donations from support groups.

The Ontario Public Library audiovisual program has operated a video checkout for the past four years. And since video cassettes have captured the attention of moviegoers the program is successful, according to Gary Friedman, head of the library's audiovisual services.

The collection includes Hollywood "classics" such as "High Society" and "Annie Hall" and newer movie releases including "The Pope of Greenwich Village" and "The Natural."

Or how about "The Sting," "The Big Chill," "The Verdict" or even "Rambo."

Movie lovers, 18 years old and older, can rent two videos, VHS or Beta, for $1 each. The rental is for two days.

"We have a video cassette collection of about 700 including film classics, recent releases and some instructional materials and documentaries," Friedman said.

If the films have been rated, the rating is included.

"Videos are very important, but so is television. We're hoping that when people come in to check out a video cassette that they also check out books," he said.

The Montclair Branch Library is the service center for 23 other branches in San Bernardino County. The library has offered video cassette rentals the past two years.

Ruth Pine, library spokeswoman, said library card holders can rent a VHS cassette for $1 for three days. Those renting cassettes must be at least 12 years old.

"It's cheaper to rent the cassettes here at the library and you can keep them longer. All the county library branches order cassettes from the Montclair library so if a person is looking for a particular cassette, they would probably find it here first," Pine said.

Ramona Gonzales, Chino Library clerk, said video cassette rentals are very popular at her facility.

"We order the cassettes for people, but we get them from the Montclair Branch Library. We suggest to people that they order directly from the Montclair library because nowadays the waiting lists for certain videos can be very long," Gonzales said.

The fee at the Chino library also is $1 for a three-day rental.

The Rancho Cucamonga Branch Library also utilizes the Montclair system for ordering cassettes.

Rancho Cucamonga library patrons needing cassettes can order them from the facility. Order forms are available, according to Dolores Land, substitute librarian.

The Upland Public Library doesn't offer video rentals.

"We can't offer that service basically because we don't have enough space. To properly store the videos, you need space for storing them and protecting them from the elements," said Pat Castaneda, Upland principal librarian.

The library also has a shortage of staff, which would make it more difficult to serve the public, she said.

Cucamonga students 'visit' 14 countries

By Andrew Horan

The 600 or so students at Cucamonga School had a chance to see the world last week.

The only traveling they did was in their imaginations, but they sampled the cultures of 14 nations, nonetheless.

Last Thursday was International Day at the school.

"It gives the kids an idea about other countries," said

Roxanne Sensenbach, the school's bilingual resource teacher.

"Too often, Americans think there is nothing else out there," she added.

To show the children about other cultures, some teachers dressed in native costumes, while others brought in pictures of the lands they represented.

Almost all the teachers served a sample of food found in their nations.

In Eniko Wills' fifth-grade class, students ate fried rice with chopsticks.

"We don't have any forks," she warned a visitor.

Other feasts included bratwurst and sauerkraut in a German room and fortune cookies in a Chinese room.

Still other teachers put on slide shows or discussed visits to foreign lands.

Students carried passports, which were stamped in each of the four "countries" they visited for 40 minutes during the day.

On the passport, they were asked to describe what they liked best about the nation and why other people should pay it a visit.

Nations represented ranged from Mexico to Egypt, China to Norway. No Libyan classrooms were reported.

Historical differences — and commonalities — were emphasized, according to Sensenbach, who organized the event with the help of two teachers, Cynthia Bush and Maureen Silvestri. □

McElwain office now in R.C.

The West Valley field office of 2nd District County Supervisor Cal McElwain has moved from Upland to the Foothill Communities Law and Justice Center in Rancho Cucamonga.

McElwain, who lives north of Upland on Mt. Baldy Road, moved his office to a spacious ground-floor suite in the newly completed Foothill courthouse.

From that office, McElwain and his field representatives will meet with constituents from the district that includes Rancho Cucamonga, Upland, Fontana, Phelan, Wrightwood and Lytle Creek.

Tom Garnella, assistant superintendent of business services. In addition the district lost 80 percent of its coverage, he said.

"It's tough to do that, because that $109,000, if not spent on insurance, would have been spent on the education of children," Garnella said.

He said the district would save an estimated $29,000 by joining the state pool.

Upland School District also faced a tremendous leap from $60,000 in premium payments to $250,000, Superintendent George Renworth said. He said the state pool would save his district about $48,000.

Emmanuel D'souza, business manager for Fontana Unified School District, said his district could save $150,000 a year that would go toward instruction equipment and supplies.

Chaffey Community College district business manager Len Grandy said the district would save $42,000 a year, while Stacy Nelson, administrator of business services for Alta Loma district, said it would save about $44,000.

Mt. Baldy School District, which is also in the PSIA, has made no decision yet, according to administrative secretary Joey Martin.

School, she is a junior at San Diego State University.

Wendy is taking the semester off while burns on her face, hands and legs heal. She makes four trips a week with her mother, Carol, to the UC-Irvine burn center for therapy.

Once very athletic, Wendy lifted weights and ran with her football-player boyfriend at school. Now she must take it easy and has limited use of her hands, which she must keep wrapped.

But she is able to do more things for herself with each passing week. She recently started writing in her now-childlike script, sending post cards to friends and the hospital staff that cared for her.

She will begin reconstructive surgery on her hands Sunday and is expected to go back for surgery once a month for the next year or so.

With mostly third-degree burns over almost half of her body, Wendy has made remarkable progress.

Her mother was constantly at her side and has kept a photographic record of her daughter's recovery — graphic reminders of how far she has come.

Wendy's boyfriend, whom she describes as "Mr. Positive," interrupted his Christmas vacation in December to spend the first few days at her bedside and now visits her when he can.

A 3-foot stack of cards lines the Guadagni fireplace hearth and huge 2-foot-high cards signed by her sorority sisters stand next to them. Fifty stuffed animals, all gifts, fill her bedroom, she said.

But reactions from strangers are more likely to be stares than support.

From the beginning, Wendy has not been shy about her injuries. She agreed to be photographed for Bay Area television and newspapers the day after the accident.

When she first saw her own face in a mirror, she reminded herself of Frankenstein, she said. Now, surgery has erased some of the scars and she wears a tight plastic mask 23½ hours a day to keep the new skin in place and to "strangle" the new scars still forming on her face, Mrs. Guadagni said.

Mrs. Guadagni explained that the form-fitting mask prevents blood from circulating in the scars, and could flatten them out. If that happens, they will be sanded down later on. If not, she said, they will be surgically removed.

"H.O.T. TIPS" (HOUSE OF TOOLS)

When using a fine grit sandpaper with my orbital sander or sanding blocks, the paper will tear long before it is worn out. To solve this problem, apply self-adhesive contact paper to the back of sandpaper. The grit will wear off before the paper tears.

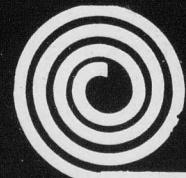

Here's an easier way to change bits if you use a router in conjunction with a router table. Place a bar magnet on the table over the router bit and it will keep the bit from falling into the chuck as you tighten it.

An electronic stud finder can be used as a metal detector to scan previously used boards for hidden nails. This will allow you to safely use this stock without risk of ruining a saw, joint or planer blades.

Eric Vilchis

Daniel Budiman of Chaffey College eyes the finish line en route to a victory in the 200-yard butterfly event against Palomar College in a dual meet.

CC swimmers eye conference finals

Having won the dual meet portion of the Inland Valley Conference swimming championship, Chaffey College goes for the undisputed title this weekend at East Los Angeles College.

"There's a chance Palomar can win the conference title if they beat us in the finals," said Chaffey coach Mike Dickson. "It's our goal to win the title outright, but we'll also use this meet to hopefully more for the state meet."

Chaffey's men's team trounced Palomar by a 74-32 to complete an undefeated dual meet season. But that's in the past and the Panthers are peaking for next month's state championships.

"We're hoping three more qualify in the men's division and two in the women's division," said Dickson. "Marc Rhodes, Kurt Burger and Russ Miya will have this last chance, as will Jennifer Kraiger and Danette Mitchell."

Those who have already qualified for the state meet on the men's team include Chris Magee, Tjatur Sugiarto, Mustansikim, Sabeni Sudiono and Daniel Budiman. The women's qualifiers include Susie Keough and Dawn Martin.

"It's going to be one of the closest state championship meets ever," said the veteran Chaffey coach. The Panthers were third a year ago and will have to contend with Orange Coast, Saddleback and defending champion Golden West, according to Dickson.

Upland netter in elite net tourney

Laxmi Poruri of Upland, rated 24th in the nation among 14-year-olds, has been invited to compete in Seventeen Magazine's 11th annual Tennis Tournament of Champions at Mission Viejo.

The 13-year-old will be among eight Southland players in the field that will include 96 of the country's best young talent. Players were selected to compete based on their top U.S. Tennis Association sectional and national rankings.

The tournament, slated for a three-day run beginning May 7, will feature play in three junior age divisions, 18-, 16- and 14-and-under.

Presented by the Maureen Connolly Brinker Tennis Foundation, the Tournament of Champions is sanctioned by the USTA. Past winners include Tracy Austin, Andrea Jaeger, Kathy Rinaldi and Zina Garrison.

Winners and runnersup in the main draw and consolation matches will receive trophies. In addition, a "Most Promising Junior Player of the Year" will be announced at the tourney. That honor includes a trophy and $3,000 travel grant to help cover tournament expenses for a year.

Last year's winner was Katrina Adams, and other past winners include Austin, Jaeger and Garrison.

Adams is among the top-seeds in the 18-and-under class as she's the defending champion. Other highly-ranked girls to watch in the 18's are Kerri Reiter of New York and

Laxmi Poruri

Nicole Arendt of New Jersey.

Among the top-ranked girls in the 14-and-under class are Carrie Cunningham of Michigan, Erika deLone of Massachusetts, Meredith Geiger of Oklahoma and Debbie Moringiello of New Jersey.

Ruttman earns fans' votes for invitational

TRAVELERS REST, S.C. — "It's a real honor. I feel great not only for myself, but for my car owner Kenny Bernstein and the whole Quaker State/King Racing team," said Joe Ruttman upon his selection as one of the top 14 drivers selected to participate in the May 11 Atlanta Invitational stock car race.

"The fact that the fans voted on the participants is what is gratifying to me," acknowledged the 41-year-old veteran from Upland as his Quaker State/King Racing crew prepared the Buick LeSabre for Sunday's Sorvan Bank 500 at Martinsville, Va.

The Atlanta Invitational, contested this year for the first time, will be run on the 1.522-mile Atlanta International Raceway. It is a $300,000 preliminary event to the Winston, the million dollar bonus race restricted to drivers who won Winston Cup races during the previous year.

Ruttman, in his sixth season as a Winston Cup regular after apprenticing on the United States Auto Club stock car circuit, received 94,179 votes during the balloting period.

"Without a good team, you just can't win races. That's why I'm so optimistic about our chances in the Atlanta Invitational. I think we have all the ingredients: owner, sponsor, crew, car and engines."

Although he has yet to win a Winston Cup race, Ruttman has the respect of his peers and, obviously, of NASCAR's rabid fans.

Already this year, he has been in contention for three titles only to be foiled on each occasion by accidents.

Exercise and drugs said a dangerous combination

By Jack Williams
Copley News Service

For some people, exercise is the recreational drug of choice: an escape from stress, an elixir for the senses, a social catalyst. For others, it can be an excuse for substance abuse.

"There is a segment of fairly fit people," said exercise physiologist Ralph La Forge, "who put in 30-40 miles of running per week, for instance, and recreationally use marijuana and/or cocaine."

"My sense is that it's on the increase because of a mentality that feels exercise magically compensates for or offsets substance abuse. Which is a gross misconception."

La Forge, director of the Sharp Preventive Medicine Center in San Diego, has observed this phenomenon through both informal and clinical surveys for the past six years. Two random studies of triathletes, for instance, indicated that 9 percent used cocaine or cocaine-like substances recreationally.

"Some of the substances," said La Forge, "are being used with the idea of enhancing the ability to recover from hard training — or to help push the athlete through the wall in an endurance event. These might be amphetamine derivatives, cocaine derivatives or a stimulant like caffeine."

The danger, he says, is that certain substances mask sensations of exercise fatigue and peak exertion while adversely affecting cardiac rhythm, particularly at high levels of intensity.

"When exercise reaches 80-85 percent of maximum heart rate," said La Forge, "amphetamines, cocaine and marijuana all have the potential to markedly inhibit the sensation of exercise fatigue. Cocaine and tobacco affect the rhythm of the heart beat, especially in recovery from all-out exercise."

"And under long, vigorous exercise with a high rate of water loss, the added stress may be quite hazardous."

La Forge is trying to discourage such abuse. He is trying to convince recreational and weekend athletes that fitness and the habitual use of drugs and alcohol are incompatible.

"There are special cautions for those 35 and older," he said. "As you age your internal medicine changes. Many things change very gradually between 35 and 40. You don't have the ability of a 21-year-old to withstand those insults to the body."

In addition, the long-term effects, because of limited studies, are not clear.

"Blood levels," said La Forge, "are dictated by the frequency and concentration of intake, but no two people are the same."

Therefore, chemicals that might clear one person's system in a certain amount of time might remain in another's — resulting in increased heart rate and diminished ability to dissipate heat.

Over-the-counter medications often can produce the same adverse effects as recreational drugs and alcohol, noted La Forge.

"If you participate while taking antihistamines and decongestants, for example, they'll probably impair performance, and those two types of medications can impair your ability to dissipate heat and can alter your perception of stress."

To those who include beer as a major component of pre-competition carbohydrate loading, cool it, La Forge suggests.

"There is no question that beer contains a good level of carbohydrates but the alcohol component is not what you want for all-out, long-distance performance," said La Forge. "If you're using it as a fluid replacement during an event ... it impairs your ability to dissipate heat. Consuming it throughout the week, prior to competition, and performing all-out on the weekend is detrimental, too."

"Alcohol is not good for the liver, where most of your energy supply is stored and mobilized in the form of glycogen.

"If you expect peak performance, it is wise to avoid any alcohol intake within at least 24 hours before exercise.

Individuals who are more sensitive may be cautioned to avoid it at least for 48 hours.

"If you're going to undergo heat stress, such as in a long-distance event, or one in which heat and humidity are a factor, it's best to avoid alcohol for at least 72 hours before event. A couple of sets of tennis, on the other hand, won't make that much difference.

"These time intervals are only approximations. A significant research base has yet to be established. But we see a lot of weekend athletes going out on Friday night for a good time, then going ahead and trying for a PR (personal record) the next day in a 10K. Or the 42-year-old surfer who consumes a case and a half of beer every week, then goes out for two to three hours of maximum effort on the weekend."

Moderate amounts of alcohol, acknowledged La Forge, generally are no problem.

"But," he said, "those two or three beers in your 20s or early 30s won't have the same effect on someone who is 30 pounds heavier in his late 50s who is trying for the same performance."

One of the problems with beer many people overlook is that two-thirds of its calories are derived from alcohol, according to Shirley Huber Steensland, a registered dietitian who coordinates nutrition services at the University of Maryland Medical System. The liver, she points out, can metabolize only some of the alcohol calories into heat.

Exercise, acknowledges La Forge, can accelerate the body's ability to deplete such adverse substances from the system. But neither alcohol, drugs nor inappropriate nutrients can be completely neutralized by exertion, he said.
